Weekend Getaway: Great Bites In Vancouver B.C.

By Leslie Kelly
December 6, 2013

There are signs on buses in Vancouver, B.C., encouraging Canadians to visit Seattle, a "foodie paradise." Well, the feeling's mutual. The trip to the Great White North is essential at least a few times a year, even when faced with a potentially long wait at the border. Some even make day trips to feast on dim sum in neighboring Richmond, or to stand in line early for a seat at Viji's, which lives up to its considerable hype. Here's a list of essential stops that should be added to every trip to this beautiful city, pictured here, looking south from the scenic seawall walk to Granville Island.

A charcuterie-centric meat market, Oyama Sausage Company on Granville Island has stuff not seen elsewhere, especially the cured game meats such as venison and bison. The duck prosciutto soars and the wild boar mortadella is out of this world. There's also an amazing array of fresh sausages. Bring a cooler and load up on links.
